Case Manager

PERSONAL STATEMENT

Kate is an occupational therapist who qualified in South Africa in 2007 and moved to London in 2009 where she has since spent most of her career working in neurosciences. Kate moved on to the senior neurosciences rotation at St George's University Hospital NHS Foundation Trust in January 2013 as a team leader within the consortium neuro-rehabilitation unit. Kate also spent a year leading the acute neuro-occupational therapy team which encompassed the major trauma pathway, neuro-cardiac, and acute neurological patients over several wards within St George's Hospital. Working in the unit and within the major trauma pathway, Kate managed a varied caseload including people with stroke, traumatic brain injury, Guillain Barré Syndrome, multiple sclerosis, spinal cord injury, motor neurone disease, amputations and complex orthopaedic conditions due to polytrauma.

Kate has worked as a case manager since June 2019, with individuals with complex brain injuries, orthopaedic injuries and long-term neurological conditions. Prior to moving into case management Kate had extensive experience of managing complicated discharges, and working with patients who required complex packages of care. She also has experience of managing challenging behaviours and conflict in families. As a case manager she has been able to build on this experience by setting up complex care packages and rehabilitation programmes. She has worked with rehabilitation teams to acquire specialist equipment and advocate for environmental adaptations and disability vehicles, as well as working with local authorities and private agents to acquire specialist accommodation for clients.

Kate undertakes continuing professional development by attending regular webinars, conferences and training courses relevant to her role as a case manager.
